The Committee on Accounting Procedure (CAP) issued one standard, the Accounting Principles Board (APB) issued five, the Financial Accounting Standards Board (FASB) issued ten, and it is now a major FASB- IASB convergence project that commenced in 2006 and is still under deliberations. In particular, we examine whether interest payments are opportunistically classified as financing activities instead of operating activities in the statement of cash flows and, if so, whether capital market participants impound the information in firm valuation. Interest payments are generally of great concern to firms because they account for a significant portion of cash flows and are often associated with debt covenants. Interest payments	13	90
